Description of the problem and a discussion of the background

1. Introduction

The dispersion of the Asian American population is evident in the high concentration of Asian Americans in various cities and towns in Greater Boston. Figure 2.1 in link indicates that 16 very different cities and towns had concentrations of Asian Americans of at least 12 percent. While large cities in Greater Boston generally have larger Asian American populations, places with the most rapid Asian American increases have actually been in smaller, suburban locales.

Chinese cuisine in Boston results from a combination of economic and regional factors. The growing Boston Chinatown accommodates Chinese-owned bus lines shuttling an increasing number of passengers to and from the numerous Chinatowns in New York City, and this has led to some exchange between Boston Chinese cuisine and that in New York

It's time to say that Asian cuisine in USA is almost everywhere, and statistical data can prove these points by understanding the existing restaurants in a particular location

2. Problem Description

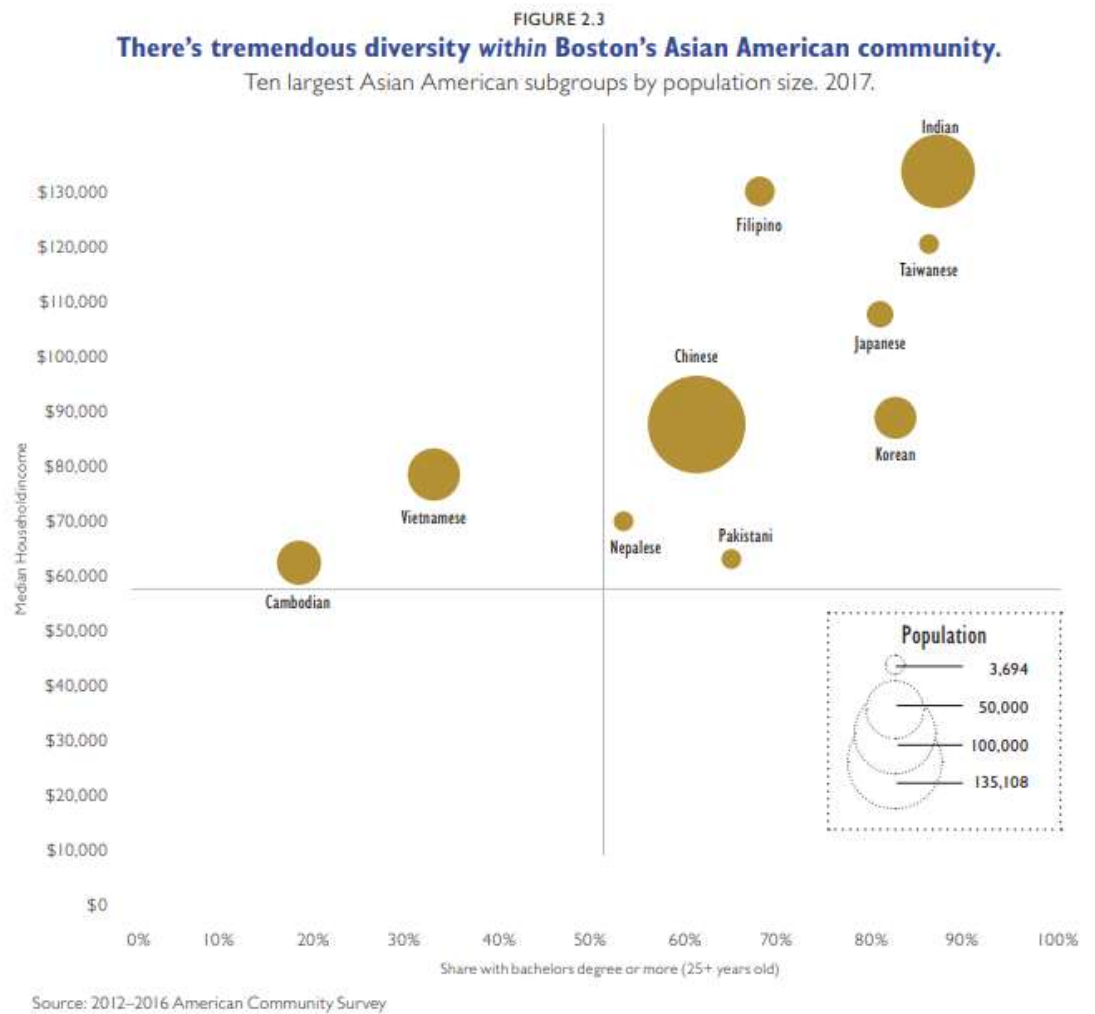

For this project, we will analyse the Suffolk country to retrieve statistics for various asian cuisine in a particular location, and this will help us to increase the opportunities to find much more offering.

In addition, many restaurants serving more native-style Chinese cuisines exist, due to the high numbers and proportion of ethnic Chinese in Massachusetts's state.

Here we will focus on Suffolk city which has the Boston town and it's neighborhood

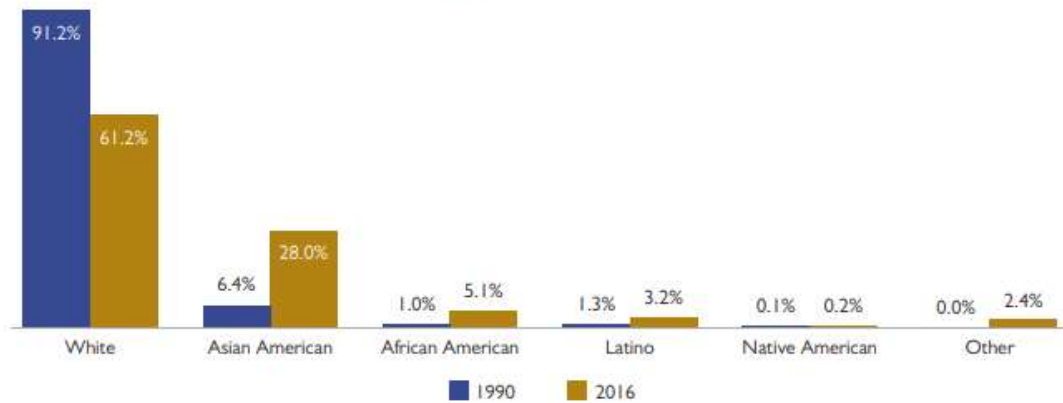

For this exercise, the state of Massachusetts was pick up for the study for the following reasons:

- Asian Americans live in communities throughout Greater Boston

- Asian American population growth is fastest in the region's smaller, suburban towns.

Quincy's Asian American population has grown dramatically since 1990.
 Population share by race and ethnicity.

Note: "Other" includes "Two or More Races," which was not an option in Census 1990, "Some Other Race Alone," and "Native Hawaiian and Pacific Islander."

- There's tremendous diversity within Boston's Asian American community.
- Indeed, as far back as 15 years ago, the Patriot Ledger dubbed Quincy "Chinatown South," noting that it was home to Asian-owned businesses that were both large—such as the sprawling and bustling Kam Man Food marketplace—and small—including nail salons, bakeries and countless eateries (Patriot Ledger, 2003).

Then, we will attempt to understand the statistics around the frequency of multiple categories of venues and the ratio of asian venues for the city of Suffolk .
